

Description

Students admitted to the Essec Advanced Master in International Business Law & Management programme may now follow their Essec studies with a Master of Law (LLM) degree from the prestigious King's College London School of Law.

This double-degree programme offers the unique opportunity to become operational in the common law and to perfect their English language skills.

King's College London School of Law offers over a dozen specialist LLM degree options, with a wide breadth of courses preparing professionals in international commercial and financial fields.

King's College London is a major source of recruitment for prominent international law firms and multinational enterprises. Further information : www.kcl.ac.uk/llm

Advantages

- Academic excellence in business administration and law studies in two of the world's most important business and law capitals;
- The power of two influential international alumni networks in law and business administration;
- A comparative law approach to international business law studies instructing students in both the civil and common law systems;
- Further perfection of language skills in French and English;
- Joint seminars in Paris and London concerning international business law and management subjects;
- Continuity of research involved in the Essec Professional Thesis and King's College Dissertation or Research Essay;
- A ten per cent (10%) pay back on tuition fees by each institution.
- Apprenticeship opportunity at ESSEC (payment of Essec tuition, salary, one-year of high level professional experience) as long as the apprenticeship contract is completed by mid-September of the year following enrolment within the Essec programme.

Admission Requirements

Students applying to the Essec-King's College double-degree programme must meet the individual admission requirements established by both institutions, in addition to obtaining a letter of recommendation from the Essec programme Academic Director.

Applicants for the double-degree programme should indicate their interest in being admitted to the double-degree programme within their Essec application package and motivation letter. Definitive admission to the double-degree programme is then subject to meeting the King's College School of Law's admission requirements and deadlines as listed on the King's College LLM programme Web site at www.kcl.ac.uk/llm. The Essec Academic Director shall assist the student in the double-degree programme application process. The application deadline for the double-degree programme is March 15th of the Essec academic year.